“New information on William Courtenay’s Residence in the United States in Poughkeepsie, NY During the War of 1812”

by St. John Courtenay III and Sarah More

1. William Courtenay, b. circa 1768, d. 26 May 1835, “Lord Courtenay” 3rd Viscount, later 9th Earl of Devon.
2. Preswell, Dorothy, “The Exiled Earl, William Courtenay – Fact and Fiction”, publ. by Dorothy Presswell Kingsbridge Devon, TQ7 1SG, copyright 2008, see page 23 (Note: Dorothy spells the ship’s name as the June Clark, but as noted above David Whitfield confirms the ship’s name was actually “Jane” and not “June” with “Clark” being the name of the ship’s captain).

4. See <https://archive.org/details/claremont-of-history-and-to-day-pub-1907-with-restored-color-and-contrast-scanned-at-600-dpi> Title: “Claremont of History and To-Day” describes Claremont New York City (Riverside Park and Grant's Tomb). This is a rare promotional pamphlet that was published in 1907, that is in the public domain, author unknown. The original document was scanned by St. John Courtenay III, on June 26, 2022, at 600 dpi with color and contrast restored for better quality than Library of Congress scan. Note: Large file download: about 200 MB in size.
5. “[T]ypical passage times from New York to the English Channel for a well-found sailing vessel of about 2000 tons was around 25 to 30 days, with ships logging 100-150 miles per day on average.” <https://www.rmg.co.uk/stories/blog/library-archive/18th-century-sailing-times-between-english-channel-coast-america-how>
